2. LO Jui-ch'ing presided over the conference. It lasted ten days and dealt with reports on public security work, reviews of accomplishments, and discussions of problems and various resolutions. All of these were related to the following five major topics:

Review of the Suppression of Counter-revolution Program

- a. Lack of thoroughness has been an error prevalent in certain areas. Some villages and hsien have not even begun the movement to suppress counter-revolutionaries. All counter-revolutionaries who should have been arrested but were not, must now be arrested and promptly disposed of in accordance with existing orders and regulations.

Forced Labor for Counter-revolutionary Offenders

- b. Forced labor is one of the measures to eliminate counter-revolutionary elements and to convert the offenders into skilled, productive workers after eliminating the individuals' counter-revolutionary thought.

- c. The Reform by Hard Labor Program must be carefully executed. Special hard labor teams must be formed for offenders who are unwilling to work. Destructive activities and attempted escapes must be prevented and punished. Those sentenced to execution must be shot in the presence of a mass meeting called for that purpose. Completion of "the task to produce" must be assured by establishing production standards: a set time, a set quality, and a set quantity. Thought education must be continued. Offenders who show penance, good work records, and whose offenses are not too serious, may be rewarded or, with approval of the proper authorities, may be released early.

Formation of Security Preservation Committees

- d. Security preservation committees must be formed on all levels. These organizations are not governmental, but are designed to guard against reactionary elements, and have the nature of a united front. The members will be elected according to proper democratic procedures, including pre-election propaganda and campaigning.

In addition to controlling counter-revolutionary activities, these committees must register reactionary Party and Youth Corps members, educate dependents of counter-revolutionary elements, and supervise foreign nationals. The committees have no authority to try or convict offenders or suspects, but will hand these cases over to the municipal or hsien government.

Strengthening Control Over Foreign Nationals

- e. Foreigners of any nationality and profession who have not sided with the Chinese people must be placed under strict control. To date these controls have not been thorough enough. Public security personnel must exercise control over foreign nationals, even in limited spheres of activity. Strict investigation and screening must precede the granting of any permission to travel, to change places of domicile, and to engage in a profession. The security preservation committee of each locality must report all contacts between Chinese nationals and foreigners. Foreign nationals of any nationality who cannot assist China in her economic reconstruction will not be expected to remain in China.

Review of Program to Build Up the Police Force

- f. Available statistics show that the program for building up the police force is 94 percent complete. Policemen retained from previous regimes have been cut from 50 to 35 percent, and new trainees have increased to 65 percent. Chinese Communist Party members now compose 17.5 percent of the entire police force.
- g. Census police must not overlook a single family or individual, police must maintain close contact with the security preservation committees, police schools must train more cadres of a higher quality, and the daily duties of the police schools must be coordinated with the outstanding political missions of the committees.
1. Comment. Probably the Security Administration Bureau is intended here. 25X1
 2. Comment. LIANG Kuo-pin has been known for some time to be Director of Public Security in Fukien; this report is probably in error. A Chinese Communist press report of 8 December 1951 states that LIANG was removed from his position in Fukien. But another press report of the same date states that he holds this position and is concurrently a member of the Fukien Government and a member of the East China Military and Administration Committee. 25X1
 3. Comment. The previously listed chief of the Shantung Provincial Public Security Department was HSU Shih-yu; A Chinese Communist press report of 8 December 1951 states that CHENG Wen-ch'ing has been removed from this position. 25X1
